Global Oil Production

In 1956, a renowned scientist named Marion King Hubbert forecasted future oil production based on his own analysis. H Most oil experts rejected his assessment. (36)_____ To everyone's surprise, however, Hubbert was finally vindicated when, in 1970, U.S. oil production surged and then gradually declined.

Afterwards, the public quickly believed Hubbert when he predicted worldwide oil production would collapse within a generation. The following years, however, showed that this pessimistic forecast was flawed. (37)_____ In Hubbert's opinion, the price of oil would not matter. In fact, it has had a profound impact on the oil supply. Rising oil prices have motivated oil companies to find new oil sources. (38)_____

The rising oil price has also made it feasible for oil companies to adopt new and more expensive extraction processes. In Canada, billions of barrels of oil are locked in deposits of oily sand. (39)_____ But now that a single barrel is worth US$100, companies can afford to tap this vast reserve. Similarly, oil fields in the U.S. state of North Dakota were hardly touched for years because the oil was trapped in solid rock. Today it is financially worthwhile for companies to use a costly procedure called "fracking" to extract the oil from the rock.

World oil production presently stands at about ninety million barrels per day, and within two decades this figure could increase. (40)_____ But as new extraction technology is developed, that day will continue to retreat further and further into the future.

- A. The reason for such an error was that it did not take economics or technological change into account.
- B. In addition, the oil industry found itself confronting unexpected crises.
- C. In the past, it was uneconomical to recover such oil.
- D. This has led to breakthrough discoveries in countries like Ghana and French Guiana.
- E. After all, similar predictions had been made before and had been proven wrong each time.
- F. Some day, the world will face an inevitable oil shortage.
- G. On the contrary, the demand for goods made from crude oil has skyrocketed.
- H. He estimated that U.S. oil production would peak within twenty years.

答案：E、A、D、C、F
